In our poll for who Con Daily readers would support on Tuesday , Barack Obama and Mitt Romney stayed pretty much neck and neck, mirroring the national stage. The difference was where those necks were. While nationally they hovered around the 47-48% mark, on the Con Daily poll they were closer to 30%, with Gary Johnson acting as a spoiler, tied early on, and finishing with 18%.

We also learned that more Con Daily readers were uninterested in voting at all (2) than in voting for Virgil Goode (1). Ouch.

That race is behind us though, and despite Obama's second term not even having started yet, we're already looking ahead to the 2016 race. Use the clicky-thing on the right (if you can navigate a butterfly ballot, you can navigate this site), and tell us who you want in 2016.
